Developed by experts in both the Affordable Care Act (ACA) and overall employee benefit law, this high-level course will ensure that the student understands the key technical components of the ACA. Additionally, its goal is to ensure that students are aware of how the law came to be enacted, the ACA's place in the overall body of federal and state laws regulating public and private healthcare and health insurance programs, and how the law may evolve and change in the future.

Students that complete this certification program will be better prepared to counsel both individual and business consumers of health insurance on the specifics of the ACA.

They will also be well versed on all of the new options and requirements for health plans the law has created, and how to best help consumers moving forward.

This course includes a textbook written for insurance agents and brokers, benefit account managers, attorneys, human resource managers or the advanced student of health policy and healthcare leaders throughout the country who are working daily in the healthcare fields that are impacted by the law. The textbook alone serves as a desk reference and created to support the NAHU Employer-Sponsored Plans in a Post ACA Era Certification course final exam.

The textbook has a balance of information on the ACA now and how it may change in the future. The reader will understand current legislation and its place in the overall body of federal and state laws regulating public and private healthcare and health insurance programs, and how the law may evolve.
